Hugh and Sarah meet in the London of 1666 and their mutual love of books nurtures their blossoming friendship. Events overtake them when they must flee for their lives in the face of the Great Fire. The story is hallmarked by Trease's meticulous research and I can think of no better introduction to history than to be immersed in a well-constructed story whose protagonists challenge stereotypes and bring events sharply to life. Links between English and History are often fruitful: this one, used with Year 7 and 8 pupils, will be especially so.
